Laws Are To Be Obeyed

President Hoover: Extract from an address before [illegible] Associated press):

"Whatever the value of any law may be, the enforcement of that law [illegible] in terms upon our statute [illegible] not, in my mi[illegible]ion. Law sh[illegible] must be [illegible] pealed [illegible] of our democracy, [illegible] to enforce the laws [illegible] upon every public official and the duty to obey it rests upon every citizen.

"No individual has the right to determine what law shall be obeyed and what law shall not be enforced. If a law is wrong, its rigid enforcement is the surest guaranty of its repeal. If it is right its enforcement is the quickest method of compelling respect for it. I have seen statements published within a few days encouraging citizens to defy a law because that particular journal did not approve of the law itself. I leave comment on such an attitude to any citizen with a sense of responsibility to his country.

"It is the purpose of the Federal administration systematically to strengthen its law enforcement agencies week by week, month by month, year by year, not by dramatic displays of violent attacks in order to make headlines, not by violating the law itself through misuse of the law in its enforcement, but by steady pressure, steady weeding out of all incapable and negligent officials no matter what their status; by encouragement, promotion and recognition for those who do their duty; and by the most rigid scrutiny of the records and attitudes of all persons suggested for appointment to official posts in our entire law enforcement machinery.

"In my position, with [illegible] obligations, there can be no argument on these points. There is no citizen who would approve of the President of the United States assuming any other attitude. It may be said by some that the larger responsibility for the enforcement of laws against crime rests with State and local authorities and does not concern the Federal Government. But it does concern the President of the United States, both as a citizen and as one upon whom rests part of the primary responsibility of leadership for the establishment [illegible] of standards of law enforcement in this country. Respect for law and obedience to law demands a distinguish between federal and state laws—it is a [illegible] of common conscience."

Franklyn Miller underwent tonsil operation at the Bethesda Hospital in Hornell last Wednesday. He was able to be moved to his home Thursday.

COMMUNICATION

Editor of the Sentinel:

Chicken and turkey thieves have been very active around Rathbone, N. Y., for the past three weeks. Three weeks ago they helped themselves to ten hens belonging to Arthur Reynolds and a week later they became bolder and took a thirty-pound gobbler and three turkeys. Still later in the week they took another turkey and hen. The last two depredations were the thieves' undoing as they were so drunk they were caught with the goods on them where they had taken them to exchange for booze at the home of Pete Simmonds.

Herbert Welch of Cameron Mills and Duane Hogancamp of Corning, were the men arrested. Hogancamp drew down a fine of $10, it being his first offense, while Welch got $20.

Justice (?) works in a strange path. If a man steals chickens because his family is starving he gets from six months to five years. If a man steals chickens to buy booze he only gets fined ten to twenty dollars. The bootlegger who knew they were stolen goods when he accepted them goes free.

ARTHUR REYNOLDS,

Star Falls From Trapeze Eighty Feet Above Circus Ring

Death-Defying Leap One of Thrills In New Marion Davies Film

The most breath-taking and spectacular circus fall ever filmed is one of the thrilling climaxes in Marion Davies, new starring vehicle, "Polly of the Circus" to be shown Tuesday and Wednesday at the Star Theatre.

A complete circus tent was erected at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios for the production, with the stands of seats, rings in the center and at the very top a dizzy perch for the aerial acrobats. Miss Davies as a member of the death-defying troupe, was required to swing thru the air at a height of eighty feet from the ground to connect with another trapeze on the other side of the tent.

Special camera stands and microphone equipment were constructed on a large "boom" that followed Miss Davies as she swung through space. Part of the action required that she miss the trapeze when a loud yell in the audience distracts her attention. By special placing of the cameras above, below and with the "boom" parallel with the star, a closeup is shown of her actually missing the bar and then the horrifying spectacle of a human form hurtling through the air to what looks like almost certain death.

Appearing in the strong supporting cast are Clark Gable, C. Aubrey Smith, Raymond Hatton and Maude Eburne.

Provisional Contract Signed By 10,000 Farmers Says S[illegible]

Syracuse, N. Y., Sept 2 — Ten thousand dairy farmers signed the provisional contract presented by the Emergency Committee of the New York Milk Shed, said G. N. Allen of Troy, Secretary, today.

Mr. Allen made the announcement in his report to a meeting of nearly 200 delegates representing dairymen of all parts of the territory. It was the same delegate group that met here last March and created the Emergency Committee. The Committee was instructed to ascertain whether 29,000 producers desired to accept an offer made by the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, Inc. It offered to assume responsibility for stabilizing milk markets and getting producers a higher return for milk, without increasing costs to consumers, if 75 per cent of the unorganized, or so-called independent group, would utilize the cooperative marketing machinery. The Emergency Committee has held 3,000 farmers' meetings since March, said Mr. Allen, and used radio and other mediums to explain the provisional contract plan. Opposition of milk dealers and lack of time in which to complete the educational campaign, he said, were factors in the failure to secure 29,000 signatures.

"Ten thousand signed the provisional contract," said Mr. Allen, "Those who did not are responsible for the fact that we have not effected a complete organization of the dairy industry. Though the moral responsibility for continued division among farmers rests heavily upon these men, it would be unfair to censor them severely. Milk dealers, distributors and other foes of cooperative marketing have fought the Emergency Committee movement relentlessly. They revived old hatreds and suspicions. they intimidated farmers with threats. They denied a market to 800 producers who were active in the work or signed contracts. These foes befogged the issue, strove to confuse farmers and divert their thinking from the paramount issue —that of a higher return to all dairymen, which is possible only through one able and efficient cooperative marketing organization.

"In view of these facts it is not surprising that a large number of producers failed to grasp the opportunity to increase their income, bring happiness to their families and elevate their industry to a worthwhile basis. The problem is primarily one of education. Those farmers who do not realize the importance of working together for their individual and the common good, must be made familiar with the facts of milk marketing. They must have opportunity to further study the problems of their industry and the remedial powers of cooperative marketing.

"The Emergency Committee of the New York Milk Shed recommends that the dairy industry consider ways and means of continuing the program that has received the support of so many producers, and the endorsements of the Governors of Nw York, Pennsylvania and Vermont, the Federal Farm Board, Farm Bureau Federation, New York, Pennsylvania and Vermont Granges and numerous other organizations and leaders in public life. If we stop now the labor of the last five months is wasted. There is no reason to believe the industry will arise from its depressed state for years without such assistance. The emergency is still with us. Dairymen's milk prices are ruinously low. Producers must unite to eliminate the cause.

R. S. Brown's Car Smashed at P. P.

Mrs. Ray S. Brown was painfully injured in an automobile accident last Saturday when the family car was smashed by a machine driven by Cyril Gibson of Elmira.

Stafford Whitmore was at the wheel of the Brown family car which was traveling toward home just west of Painted Post, when the accident happened. Gibson in speeding up to pass a third machine evidently lost control of his car which reeled into the ditch and then swung back into the road to strike the Brown car, the front end of the Elmiran's auto crashing into the side of Mr. Brown's machine driving over on its side. Mrs. Brown who was in the rear seat, was thrown forcefully against the framework when the car went over. She was badly bruised about the shoulder and hip and suffered seriously from the shock. Fortunately Mrs. [illegible] escaped without fracturing bones.

The Brown car was a total [illegible] Gibson when working has been employed by the Lackawanna road. Unfortunately for the victims of the accident, he has no insurance.

STALKER FOR CONGRESS

Republicans viewed the announcement of W. Sterling Cole's candidacy for Representative in Congress with a mixture of surprise and expectation. They were surprised that the keen young Bath attorney had been urged into the race against a veteran Congressman who for five terms had satisfactorily served at least ninety per cent of his constituents. On the other hand, they expected a move would be made against Gale H. Stalker by the element which has always disliked the Congressman's strong stand for Prohibition.

Thus the paradox. Yet complex as the situation may seem up to that point, there is more meat in this political pot than the paradox at first would indicate.

The writer of this article has the highest personal regard for Mr. Cole, gained through years of the pleasantest relationship with his family. He is a young man of outstanding latent ability, and with the added experience of a few more years may raise high in politics, if he chooses to lay his life along that course. His candidacy, however, is lacking in one particular. He selected a particularly inauspicious time to run for high office.

This district has repeatedly registered its sentiment as an out and out dry section of the country. Rural in complexion, the people of the 37th are not deceived by the false promise of "Beer prosperity" which confuse less informed groups in the larger cities. They know that against all the pressure brought to bear upon him by forces backed by liquor interests, Gale Stalker has stood firmly in support of the convi[illegible]ions of the ma[illegible]y of the people in this [illegible] know [illegible] during the ten year[illegible] tenure of office [illegible] Stalker has faithfully served all the people of this district; has been ready to obtain favors and do errands for the poorest voter, as well as the most affluent and influential citizen. They know these years of service are one of the greatest assets a Congressman can have, and that an inexperienced man anxious though he may be to do his best, is hopelessly handicapped.

The majority of Republicans know that 1932 is not the time to wage embittering partisan fights in the primaries. They know the scars of every such battle are tonics to the supporters of the Roosevelt-Garner ticket. Many Republicans after analyzing the situation, honestly believe that some of the forces behind Mr. Cole's candidacy, entirely unknown to him of course, are playing a deep game of checkers the first move of which would be to defeat Mr. Stalker, and the last to "jump" Mr. Cole in order to put another Democratic member into Congress.

Mr. Stalker has earnestly, honestly and effectively served this district. He is heartily in sympathy with the policies of the Republican administration. He has stood like a bulwark between the people of this district and the forces of the liquor traffic bent on restoring beer and other intoxicants to the easy access which existed during the old liquor license days.

No one at any time has been able to offer a more satisfactory, workable solution of the liquor traffic than the Eighteenth Amendment has proven. Until such a plan is advanced, the people of this district will fight to hold what they have gained. There is no better way to stand off the assaults of the liquor interests, than to continue to elect dry Congressmen. Gale Stalker has unquestionably proved himself dry.

BANKS OUT OF TROUBLE

Official information at Washington shows that there are very few bank failures and that those institutions that were solvent and were compelled to close their doors early in the year are reopening for the purpose of continuing their business, or liquidating their affairs. Thousands of banks have been saved by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Corporation merely lends to banks and takes over some of their collateral securities, thus relieving the banks from [illegible]ortages of ready money, due to the depression. [illegible]e Government gives nothing to the banks, as [illegible] people seem to suppose.

NECESSITIES?

[illegible]litorial wisecracker observes that some [illegible]e still luxuries abroad "but in America [illegible]en't an automobile, a radio, mechanical [illegible]r and a vacuum cleaner, who are you?"

PRICES ARE GOING UP

The upward movement in commodity prices has begun. That is what all the economic authorities have been saying must happen before prosperity can come back. Cotton is up, wool is up, hogs are up, and silk went up so high and so rapidly on the Japanese Silk Exchange the other day that the authorities closed the exchange to prevent a riot.

With raw materials rising, it follows that the prices of goods manufactured from them must speedily rise, and that brings the matter right down to everybody in this town.

Now is the time to buy.

Commodity prices are not going any lower. They have touched bottom. People who have been waiting to make their purchases until they were sure that the bottom had been reached had better dig into their purses now and buy while the merchants' shelves are still stocked with low priced goods. They are not going to remain on the shelves very long, and the next lots which our local dealers buy are going to cost them more and will have to sell for more.

We have a distinct feeling that we have turned the corner of hard times. We find that all over the country almost everybody shares the same feeling. We all want prosperity back, and we want it back as quickly as we can get it. The quickest way to bring it back is for everybody who has an unfilled want and any money whatever with which to supply that want, to spend that money now. Dollars are going to get cheaper, as goods go higher in price. It has been many, many years since the dollar would buy as much in clothing or fabrics or groceries or hardware, in shoes, or household goods or furnitue, as it will today. It will be many, many years, we hope, before it will again be possible to buy such bargains as are available all around us today.

The people who have been wise enough to hang on to their money during the depression are setting the example for all the rest of us. They are buying in the stock market, they are buying in the grain market, they are buying in the wool market. That means that "big money" has got over being afraid, and we think it is time for lesser people with little money to overcome their own timidity and begin to spend.

By buying now you speed the return of prosperity.

TURNING THE TIDE

On a momentous occasion a former President of the United States declared that the "way to resume is to resume", and one industrial leader has put that formula into actual practice.

In an open letter to Roy D. Chapin, the new live-wire who has entered President Hoover's Cabinet as Secretary of Commerce, James H. Rand, Jr., president of the Remington Rand Company, which makes typewriters, accounting machines and everything else for office appli[illegible]ances, says:

"In an[illegible] the appeal you [illegible] American [illegible]ess and business men for courage, foresight and faith in this country and its future, I am happy to inform you of a decision which may help to 'turn the tide in the right direction.'

"Our Company has, today, issued instructions to its purchasing department to buy immediately four million five hundred thousand dollars worth of raw material and supplies for use the balance of the year, And, in addition, wherever possible at present prices, contracts are to be placed covering all our requirements for the entire year of 1933, such contracts to be based upon an anticipated business increase of 25 per cent over our 1932 requirements.

"In taking this step we are motivated by the desire to sell our products by helping to increase general business activity; also, by the desire to take advantage of current prices of raw materials, many of which are the lowest in our 55 years of business history."

THEY BORROWED MONEY

Publication of the loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to banks, building loan associations and others has served to satisfy the curiosity of a lot of people. President Hoover and Atlee Pomerene, Chairman of the Corporation were opposed to this publicity provision forced into the bill by Speaker Garner.

Government and banking officials have been emphasizing the fact that the money borrowed from the Government by banks and others was backed up by ample securities.

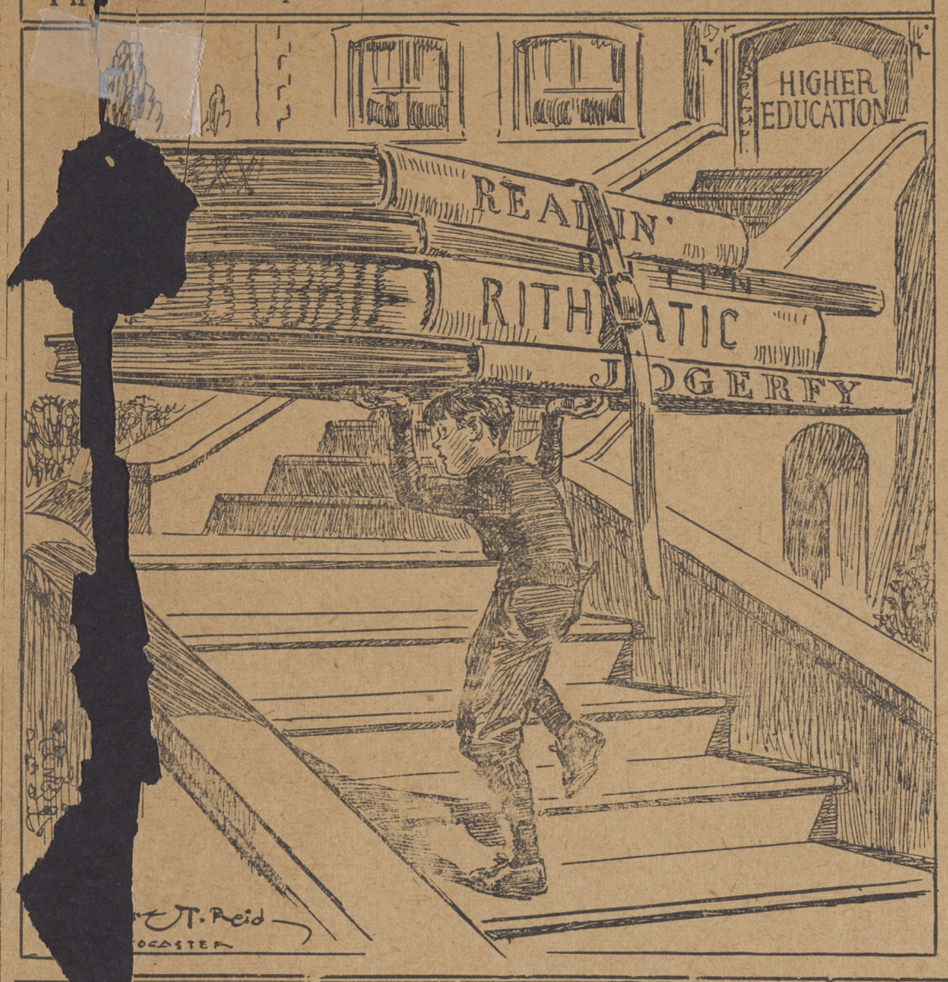
Banks throughout the country, through the money they have borrowed from the Government, have been able to loosen up their credit facilities to the benefit of their communities. Evidently the fear that banks would be weakened when it became known that they had borrowed from the Government is proving groundless. The different communities have been quick to understand how their banks have tried to help them and they apparently are encouraged that the Government is with them in such a practical way.

WALL STREET, LIMITED

Within the narrow confines of Wall Street new antics are being performed by the bulls and the bears. At least they furnish evidence that there is a new spirit of confidence in securities.

We don't remember the name of the political economist who pointed out, many years ago, that if he could be Emperor of China and issue a decree that every Chinaman's shirt tail must be three inches longer, it would double the business of the Manchester cotton mills. Whoever he was, he expressed a great economic truth.

Fi[illegible]undred Steps the Hardest — By Albert T. Reid



BRUCE BARTON

...w[illegible]fes of "THE [illegible] MASTER EXECUTIVE"

[illegible]plying a week-to-week inspiration for the heavy-burdened who will find [illegible] human trial paralleled in the experiences of "The Man Nobody Knows."

A MAN COMES OUT

Th[illegible]rs of Jesus' doubt are set down as forty in number. It is easy [illegible]agine that lonely struggle. He had left a good trade amon[illegible]le who knew him and trusted him—and for what? To becom[illegible]andering preacher, talking to folks who never heard of him? And what was he to talk about? How, with his lack of experience, should he find words for his mesage? Where should he begin? Who would listen? Would they listen? Hadn't he perhaps made a mistake?

Satan, says the narrative, tempted him, saying: "You are hungry; here are stones. Make them into bre[illegible]"—The temptation of material success. It wa[illegible]tirely unnecessary for him to be hungry eve[illegible] had a good trade; he knew well enough [illegible]rganizing ability was better than Joseph's. [illegible]d build up a far more successful business [illegible]

[illegible]u, according to the narrative, [illegible]ng him up into a high mountain and showing him the kingdoms of the world. "A[illegible] these can be yours, if you will only compromise." He could go [illegible] Jerusalem and enter the priesthood; that was a sure road to distinction. He could do good in that way, and have the satisfaction of success as well.

Or he might enter the public service, and seek political leadership. There was plenty of discontent to be capitalized, and he knew the farmer and the laborer; he was one of them; they would listen to him.

For forty days and nights the incessant fight went on, but once settled, it was settled forever. In the calm of that wilderness there came the majestic conviction which is the very soul of leadership—the faith that his spirit was linked with the Eternal, that God had sent him into the world to do a work which no one else could do, which—if he neglected it—would never be done.

Magnify this temptation scene as greatly as you will; say that God spoke more clearly to Jesus than to any who has ever lived. It is true. But to every man of vision the clear Voice speaks; there is no great leadership where there is not a mystic. Nothing splendid has ever been achieved except by those who dared believe that something inside themselves was superior to circumstances. To choose the sure thing is treason to the soul. . . .

If this was not the meaning of the forty days in the wilderness, if Jesus did not have a real temptation which might have ended in his going back to the bench at Nazareth, then the forty days' struggle has no real significance to us. But the temptation was real, and he conquered.

The youth who had been a carpenter stayed in the wilderness, a man came out. Not the full-fledged master who, within the shadow of the cross could cry, "I have overcome the world." He had still much growth to make, much progress in vision and self-confidence. But the beginnings were there. Men who looked upon him from that hour felt the authority of one who has put his spiritual house in order, and knows clearly what he is about.

Israel Journeying Toward Canaan
Lesson for September 11 — Numbers 10:11-36
Golden Text — Numbers 10:29

The [illegible]renchild[illegible] of Israel occupied about fo[illegible] years [illegible] in their wanderings toward [illegible]an the [illegible] of promise. It is surprisin[illegible]ow[illegible] [illegible]neventful was their wilderne[illegible]ojouss[illegible]n, although [illegible]was it [illegible] supremimpo[illegible]ance in [illegible]ing la[illegible]e foundans [illegible]tio[illegible] their ron [illegible]ligi[illegible]d culture, [illegible] so [illegible]paring t[illegible] for here[illegible]e moment[illegible] chanpus[illegible]s of theirter [illegible]tory.

Rev. Chas. E. Dunn

For e[illegible] [illegible]t part [illegible]life [illegible]s fairly [illegible]led, [illegible]ett[illegible]h headq[illegible]tersua[illegible]t Kades[illegible]holy[illegible], a[illegible]rine on the southern border the p[illegible] of [illegible]mised land, with an excell[illegible] spriona[illegible] of water. Our lesson describes the departure of the Israelites from Mt. Sinai, where they had camped nearly a year, giving, in detail, the order of the twelve tribes in the route of march.

Then comes the charming episode of Moses' appeal to his father-in-law Hobab, elsewhere called Jethro, to act as guide. A member of the nomadic clan of Kenites or Midianites, he was thoroughly acquainted with the country through which the chosen people desired to pass. It is evident that he finally yielded to his son-in-law's urgent entreaty, despite his initial blunt refusal. That his services were not forgotten is indicated by Saul's counsel, many years later, to the Kenites to separate themselves from the enemy he was about to attack, because they, doubtless through Hobab, had been kind to his own folk. (See 1 Samuel 15:6.)

The Golden Text, "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good," the greeting of Moses to Hobab, is one of the Bible's gracious invitations. Hobab was a foreigner, but he is promised complete equality of treatment. "Come, be a pair of eyes for us," pleads Moses, to quote Moffatt's graphic translation, "and as the Eternal prospers us, so will we prosper you."

The Church of God might well make use of the Hobabs outside its fold capable of guiding its thinking into new areas of experiment. Let every household of faith welcome such with open arms in the generous affection of the Golden Text.

AL—the new editor

I hereby extend the hand of fellowship to Al Smith, editor. I have not always agreed with the Hon. Alfred E. Smith, politician, but when he began to write for the papers a couple of years back I thought I saw the makings of a newspaper man in him.

Now that he is out of politics—so far as the present campaign is concerned, at any rate—and is a full-fledged editor with a magazine of his own, Al and I ought to get along fine. I'll say this for Al, he puts a punch into whatever he writes. He has ideas.

In the New Outlook, of which he is to be the responsible editor, he will doubtless say a lot of things with which I won't agree, and probably will say a great many things with which I will be in perfect harmony. Anyway, like a lot of other Americans, I'm going to watch for that first issue under his direction.

TODAY AND TOMORROW

LIFE—a survival

Strolling along the bank of a trout stream on my farm the other day I saw a fish capture an incautious frog and proceed to devour it. Crossing the meadow on my way back to the house I saw a hawk pounce down upon a baby rabbit and heard the victim's shrill scream as the bird's talons pierced its skin. At the edge of my wife's flower garden I encountered a small, striped snake in the act of swallowing a toad.

That, I reflected, is life as the animals experienced it. They prey upon each other and none is safe. But they have no other way to live. It would be as foolish to call the hawk, the snake or fish wicked as it would be to call humans wicked because they, too, kill animals for their food.

Sloppy sentimentalists endow the lower animals with the same sensibilities and emotions as humans, and make a great fuss about the cruelty of life. No one who eats meat is in a position to criticize the hawk that eats rabbits and in time, a few thousand years, perhaps, men may get over the urge to kill other men because they dress differently, or speak a different language, or get the better of them in trade.

CREDIT—the original idea

When the five-day week and the "staggering" of hours of employment so that everybody will have a job become the general practice in the United States—and I see signs which make me believe that they are coming—perhaps the credit will go to the man who started the project, perhaps not.

The man is Isador Teitelbaum, who makes and sells fine furniture in New York. One day last fall Mr. Teitelbaum, who is a deep student of economic questions, outlined his idea of the short week and the wider distribution of jobs. "Come out to the national convention of the Furniture Association and tell them about it," his friend urged. Mr. Teitelbaum had never made a public speech in his life, but he talked that convention, representing employers of 400,000 men and women, into indorsing his plan.

Since then the shorter week [illegible] been put forward by hundreds of others, and it was one of the big features of the President's industrial conference a couple of weeks ago. Somebody else may get the credit for starting it, which is why I want to put in the record now that it was Isador Teitelbaum's original idea.

'CELLO—the masterpiece

The greatest maker of violoncellos was Nicolas Amati, who died two hundred years ago in Cremona, Italy. The greatest maker of bows for violins and 'cellos was Alphonse Tourte of Paris, who died many years ago. The greatest 'cellist, until his death, was Alfredo Piatti of London, who owned Amati's finest 'cello and played it with Tourte's finest bow.

Probably the greatest living 'cellist is Willem Willeke, born in Austria of a Dutch father and an English-Hungarian mother and now an American citizen. He has owned Piatti's Amati 'cello for a long time. At a dinner given by music lovers in Willeke's honor the other night in New York, the Tourte bow which Piatti used was given to the 'cellist reuniting two famous instruments.

Nobody ever heard such music as Willem Willeke produced when he drew that bow across the strings of that 'cello.

HOARDERS—still with us

"Frightened" money is beginning to come out of the tin cans and mattresses. It takes a lot of persuasion, though, to get some of it back into the channels of trade again.

Up in my country the largest store in southern Berkshire county went out of business, and closed out its stock at unheard of prices. On the opening day of the sale, which was widely advertised, the main street of Great Barrington was almost impassable, it was so crowded with farmers and village folk rushing to buy the bargains.

And the money they brought was what they had carefully hoarded away, fearing to put it into the banks.

"We took in more than ten thousand dollars in the old-fashioned large-sized currency on the first day of the sale," the manager told me. "Many of the bills were actually moldy, and almost all of them were creased and damp."

There are still hundreds of millions of dollars of these old "big bills" unaccounted for, the Treasury reports.

President Urges Producers To Join With Organization

Reiterating his confidence that dairy farmers will yet sweep aside prejudice and work together for their mutual protection, Fred H. Sexauer, president of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, Inc., today declared that his organization "will continue to accept a position of leadership of the dairy industry of the New York Milk Shed.

Speaking before a meeting of dairymen's delegates representing all groups of producers in all sections of the territory called to receive a report of the Emergency Committee of the New York Milk Shed, which has been working since March to organize 75 per cent of the independent producers, Mr. Sexaurer said that the Dairyman's League endeavors "to be a constructive factor in the milk market." It must, he said, protect its 52,000 members' interests and obtain for them the best possible outlets.

"Whether the unorganized producers are ready to support a program of protection for the industry and its markets is a matter for which the Dairymen's League is not responsible," said Mr. Sexaurer "That responsibility lies with the individuals who fail to control their own milk, who allow it to be controlled by interests whose responsibilities are not to producers but to those who may have money invested in the distributing business.

Mr. Sexauer said that there is nothing that the Dairymen's League can do other than renew the offer of assistance made to the whole industry five months ago when the Emergency Committee was created. He specified that in renewing the offer some changes must be made to meet changed conditions. The offer made last March provided that the Dairymen's League would accept as members unorganized producers if 75 per cent were willing to join together. That would have been about 29,000. Assurance was given, supported by testimony of marketing experts, that with this additional membership the Dairymen's League would be able to correct marketing abuses and return to all producers higher milk prices without additional cost to consumers.

"Since we made that offer," said Mr. Sexauer, "it has been tested and tried, maligned and abused, but the Dairymen's League has stood fast to the purpose of that offer. Thousands of producers, and others in the busines world have become convinced that it was the soundest program that could be offered to the dairy industry.

In presenting this plan again the Dairymen's League incurs a definite risk and a positive obligation. Today no one wants more milk than they have a market for. On that basis the Dairymen's League would not feel the loss of 25 per cent of its supply. Our risk in this program is the acceptance of additional quantities of milk without the problem being solved and with such additional milk becoming a marketing burden to the organization."

Mr. Sexauer said that since March 500 dairymen who participated in the Emergency Committee program have been shut out of their regular markets by dealers opposed to the movement. The Dairymen's League, he said, accepted these men as members, providing them a market and increasing its supply of milk without acquiring outlets. Mr. Sexauer indicated that he expected dealers to continue to fight any attempt to organize farmers. In his concluding statement addressed to the delegates he said: "If you are not willing to take off your coats and fight like men you had better not accept the plan suggested by the Dairymen's League.

The Boy Who Lost the Race

The hot summer sun was going slowly down its afternoon trail behind the purple hlil and a breeze had awakened from the lake to cool the long trail around its shores.

The boys returned early from helping their fathers in the corn fields and, after an evening meal of fish and sweet corn, they gathered in the center of the village.

For it was the evening of all evenings for the boys, because the annual race for the white moccasins and the title of Swiftfoot was ta go to the winner.

Every boy older than ten and less than fifteen year old was ready for the sound of the tomtom as the starting signal. The course was out of the village and along the trail, to touch as they passed, the white ash on the opposite side of the lake. Swiftly they started.

The whole village watched the race; one small boy soon out-distanced the rest. Far ahead he came down the last stretch toward the village. Just ahead of him, however, he saw a little bird drop from its nest in the overhanging oak right in the trail. Forgetting the race, he picked up the bird and climbed up in the tree, restored it to the nest and its mother.

While he did this, the other runners passed and the winner received the title of Swiftfoot and the prized white moccasins. When, at lenght the boy who stopped had reached the finsh line and the others told how he had lost the race, the chiefs called him into the council and, with a hearty shout from all the villagers, gave him the lifelong name of Kindheart.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

OUR QUEST OF TRUTH

How many times we have pounced upon supposed truths,—only to find out, after more exhaustive study and experiment—that we were wrong!

For instance: I have preached for years that, the pipe-smoker may bring himself a lip-cancer by long frequent massage with a pipe-stem. Now, a careful thinker observes that tobacco has little influence in causing cancer; in other words, any other sort of stick would cause cancer of the lip just as quickly, used in the same way. No, mama, I'm not trying to encourage the use of tobacco; I'm just telling Grand-dad not to chew any sort of stick as a habit.

It is known that an exposed corset-stay may bring to light a cancer of the breast. No tobacco about that, but it is a villain, just the same.

And, a fine medical writer tells us that blood-pressure is not permanently made worse by tea or coffee or even salt. That more folks die from lack of chlorides than from excess of them. That the INTELLIGENT use of these things never does harm.

Another thing we learn: If indisposed, go at once to your good family physician; don't seek him as a last resort, but as a very first and best aid in trouble. It will pay you.

We know now that meats are not "deadly poison" to the human organism. To be a "vegetarian" is to be a faddist—and, all faddists are skating on thin ice. Nevertheless a finicky, evanescent public will do as it pleases, with my full consent.

One of my own very satisfactory conclusions is, good common horse sense is a qualification to be proud of.

An operation for diseased ovary? Removal of tumor? Of the appendix? Or, for hernia? If you have had any of these operations, yours is a "surgical abdomen," or has been. And, the nerves within that wonderful structure may not function for a good while as they did before you had the disease requiring the surgery.

I often tell my patients that have had operations: "Let a mechanic stoop down before your piano and saw a hole in its "abdomen", let him go inside the instrument and remove part of the wires, and twist the others here and there. Then let him fill the wound in the wooden wall and varnish it anew, so that all evidence of the job is hidden. Would you expect the piano to play, after the internal damage to its strings?"

So it is with the surgical abdomen, whose nerves have been originally adjusted far more perfectly than any piano-strings. You may have had the best surgeon on earth, for a most malignant condition—the operation may have been done in the highest skill of perfection,—yet the damaged nerves may not perform naturally for a long time, until the parts have become adjusted to the new order of things. Give yourself a few months time to get over the effects of your, possibly, life-saving operation.

If you have had a capital operation and yet have a quarrelsome belly, for goodness sake let up on your carpet-tack diet of "roughage." Eat soft, easily-assimilable, nourishing food—the kind that builds up wounded tissue and nerves. Let your bowel rest from the rough stuff; try smooth stuff.

Potato Growers On Muck Soils To Relay Potato Prices

Farm Bureaus in Nine Counties Establish Information Service.

Growers of potatoes on muck soil are making a large number of sales directly to truck buyers. This system which has developed since the growth of trucking seems bound to make further growth, in the opinion of many potato growers.

While this system has brought about a favorable change in the marketing system in many potato growing sections, it has brought some practices which have not been so favorable. Many of the growers of potatoes on muck soils met at the summer field meeting of the Empire state potato club on the farm of Seymour Bridge at Fremont in Steuben county. They brought out the fact that the truck method of buying has not provided any system of reporting the sales and the prices paid. Growers from Wayne and Genesee counties report that the practice has grown in which some buyers have made false reports of prices paid.

In order that this practice may not continue, the committee recommended that the farm bureaus in the counties of Wayne, Livingston, Genesee, Orleans, Oswego, Ontario, Steuben, Cayuga, and Madison, establish a relay reporting system for the information of growers who are selling potatoes grown on muck soils.

The system will be simple and workable, it is believed. The plan provides that around each muck area growing potatoes that are moving by truck, reporters be established who will report each day the movement of potatoes from the area together with the price paid as reported by the grower. This information will be compiled and reported each night to the other cooperating counties so that information for the entire muck area of New York state will be available within a few hours.

This system is not intended to replace the regular marketing reporting system at the terminal markets, but it is set up to get at the price and movement of potatoes by trucks that serve the growers direct from the trade.

This system provides only for information which gives the quantity moved and the price. It will be passed on to other groups simply as information for their use. This movement has nothing to do with price prediction or future supply forecast.

Raspberries should be pruned soon after harvest. That is also the time to propagate new plants. The free Cornell bulletin about raspberries and other bramble fruits gives suggestions about pruning and propagation in addition to other helpful hints. Ask the office of publication of the New York state college of agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y. for E-224.

"Probably the low point in prices of stocks, bonds, and basic commodities has been passed, but the world monetary chaos is still with us. For the next ten years, world demand for gold will probably be the major factor affecting prices, as it has been for the past seventeen years. Caution about debts continues to be good advice." —G. F. Warren, August, 1932.

THIS WEEK IN WASHINGTON

Washington, D. C., September 6 —Not since the [illegible] days of the [illegible] century, when Th[illegible]re Roosevelt was President, ha[illegible] much violent criticism of gover[illegible]mental methods and public men a[illegible]peared in print as has been coming [illegible]ut in the past year or so. It is t[illegible] sort of stuff which President [illegible]oosevelt denounced as "muck[illegible]king." Nobody in Washington is e[illegible]mpt, from the President down. T[illegible]re is hardly a member of Congre[illegible] or a public official above the [illegible]de of bureau chief who has no[illegible] been bitterly attacked and cri[illegible]d by one or another of the g[illegible] of Washington newspaper m[illegible]ho are writing books and m[illegible]ine articles.

The latest of th[illegible] exposures is a book which gives [illegible]e record of the expense bills and [illegible]mileage charges collected by nun[illegible]rous Senators and representativ[illegible]s. Few people ple realize that, u[illegible]er a law enacted more than fifty [illegible]ears ago, every member of both [illegible]es is entitled to collect forty c[illegible] a mile from the treasury at th[illegible]eginning and end of each session [illegible] Congress, as travelling expense[illegible]t dates back almost to the sta[illegible] coach days, when traveling [illegible]really expensive and necessar[illegible]y slow. A member from the Paci[illegible]ic Coast, who pays about $275 f[illegible]r his railroad and pullman far[illegible] in going to Washington and [illegible]urning home, draws more than [illegible]00 for those expenses, under [illegible] forty-cents-a-mile law. And i[illegible]pecial session follows immediate[illegible]on the heels of a regular session, [illegible]s is often the case, the Governm[illegible]ent pays each member a round [illegible]rip expense allowance of forty c[illegible]nts a mile, even if they don't leave [illegible] Washington between the two sess[illegible]ons.

Such revelations [illegible] as these are stirring up a lot o[illegible] questions back in the home state [illegible] and districts, and it is no secre[illegible] here that a great many state[illegible]men in both Houses are consid[illegible]ably worried. A very interesting [illegible]list has been compiled of Senator[illegible] and representatives who have pu[illegible] members of their own families [illegible]n Uncle Sam's payroll as secretari[illegible]s, committee clerks and the like. [illegible] That is another old Washingt[illegible]custom. The statement has been [illegible]ade here that at least twenty-fo[illegible]men of both houses have fail[illegible]dition because of these exposures.

Bonus Again in December?

Washington is wondering what will happen next winter when Congress reconvenes and the American Legion, as an organization, makes its demand for immediate cashing of the veterans' bonus certificates. With a mapority of the state conventions of the Legion having endorsed that demand, it begins to loom as one of the major problems which the authorities in Washington must face.

The Congress which meets in next December will be the same Congress that adjourned in July, since the new members to be elected in November will not begin their terms until March 4th. Nobody in or out of the Administration is able to advance even a guess as to where the money would come from to pay out $3,000,000,000 in immediate cash.

It is pointed out that the immense sums handled by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other agencies for the stabilization and recovery of business do not call for any cash at all, and are in no sense gifts or appropriations of public money. They are loans of credit made on the best possible security. But it would be impossible to satisfy the demand of the bonus seekers in any form except actual cash, and that would mean either a practical doubling of all Federal taxes, or the offering of an enormous public loan and increasing the national debt.

Cheering Mortgage News

Perhaps the most widely cheering news that has come out of Washington in a long time is that there is to be a let-up in the foreclosure of mortgages. It started when Franklin Fort, president of the newly created Federal Home Loan Bank organization, persuaded the comptroller of the currency to telegraph instructions to all receivers of national banks ordering them to suspend all foreclosure proceedings. This was followed by an appeal to the various state bank superintendents ,and practically all of them have agreed that forced sales under foreclosure proceedings for the realization of assets of failed banks will be suspended for sixty days or more while the Federal Home Loan Bank is being organized.

The Home Loan Bank expects to be in a position to lend up to 40 percent of the appraised value on home properties, and so make it possible for home owners who are in distress to retain their homes.

Possibly the most enduring and far-reaching effect of the business men's conference held in Washington in the last week in August may come from the stimulus which was given there to the demand for general adoption of the five-day week in industry and business, and the division of work, wherever that is possible, so that without increasing payrolls three men can be employed where two are now employed, or any some such proportion.

All reports received here indicate that this plan is meeting with the approval of business men and manufacturers, not only in the big industries, but all the way down the line.

That Economic Conference

In appointing Norman H. Davis of New York as one of the American members of the international committee which is to make arrangements for the national economic conference to be held next fall, President Hoover again stepped over party lines. Mr. Davis is a Democrat. He was Undersecretary of the Treasury and Undersecretary of State in President Wilson's administration. He was one of the American delegates to the International Disarmament Conference, and is a member of the Finance Committee of the League of Nations. He is an experienced international financier and an able diplomat, and his appointment indicates that the forthcoming conference is going to be taken quite seriously.

The principal problem which that conference will try to solve is that of establishing some equal standard of money which can be utilized everywhere in the world, so that the inequalities of foreign exchange and the consequent dislocation of international trade may be abolished. The belief is growing here that some sort of an international agreement to put a modicum of silver alongside of gold as the metallic basis of money can be accomplished.

Special Session of State Legislature Seems Likely

Albany, Sept. 6 — In the old rough-and-tumble wrestling days when two combatants fell to the ground together, neither having a decisive advantage over the other, it was called a "dog fall." That pretty nearly describes the outcome of the action of Mayor Walker before Justice Staley of the Supreme Court in which he challenged Governor Roosevelt's power to remove him from office. The court decided that the Governor's power to remove the Mayor is unquestioned, but supplemented that decision with the statement that in the conduct of the case Mr. Roosevelt had been guilty of three irregularities. He had no right to consider anything except the Mayor's official acts unless his personal acts involved criminal or moral guilt which would unfit him for his office; he had no right to go into acts of the Mayor's first term in office, since the people had thereafter passed their verdict upon him; and instead of accepting the record of the Hofstader committee at face value, he should have called the original witnesses.

Dynamite in the Decision

The Judge admitted these remarks of his were only advisory, as the courts have no power over the acts of the Governor, but, as remarked by those who took the trouble to study the decision, it is nevertheless "full of dynamite." "If Mayor Walker is removed or resigns," said a State official who has seen many Governors and Mayors come and go, "I'll expect the supporters of Mayor Walker to make the rafters ring with their charge that he didn't have a fair trial—and they can point to the court decision to prove their case."

Want to See the Elephant

Not only is there a very active contest on to see who shall be nominated for Governor on the Republican ticket this year, but there is an equally lively rivalry as to where it shall be done. Evidently there are several cities which would like to see the G. O. P. elephant in action, among them Utica, Lake Placid, White Plain, Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo—citizens of the latter declaring they haven't had a Republican State convention there since anybody can remember. Both the date and place will be fixed next Thursday, when a meeting of the Republican State Convention will be held in New York City.

Young Teddy Not Coming

Theodore Roosevelt the younger is not coming home from his job as Governor General of the Philippines, and so won't be here to give any help in offsetting the effort of the Democratic condidate for President to play on the family name. It is understood his mother, widow of the late President, and his sister, Mrs. Alice Longworth, both have urged him to come and he had consented to do so. President Hoover, however, on learning that the people of the islands were desirous of having Mr. Roosevelt stay and carry on important work under way, requested that he place duty first and remain at his post. At any rate, the people of the country are gradually but surely finding out the difference in the Roosevelts.

Garner's Acceptance Edited

Speaker Garner's letter accepting the Democratic nomination for Vice President has been made public at last. Originally it is said to have been dated August 17 and to have been brought by Mr. Garner when he come to visit Governor Roosevelt. There seems to be no doubt that it since underwent a thorough pruning, if not almost an entire rewriting, and when it was finally released under date of August 23 it was a perfectly harmless document . There was nothing in it that anybody could find fault with, and the last six words of that description might be omitted. It doesn't even contain the Speaker's famous policy so aptly expressed by him when he said; "I always try to vote for the things that are for the good of the country, except when two-third of the Democrats want a bill passed."

May Have to Take Lehman

It is asserted by those in the very inner circles of things Democratic that there are enough delegates pledged against Herbert Lehman, Lieutenant Governor, to prevent his nomination for Governor. It is admitted at the same time that Mr. Lehman may be nominated. The reaso n is not that Governor Roosevelt wants him. It is that, in the first place, it is believed Alfred E. Smith feels obligated to support him; and, in the second place, it may be necessary to put him at the head of the ticket for financial reasons if funds continue to be so tight. The New York Times recently stated that Mr. Lehman spent $800,000 to promote the political interests of Smith. Nobody knows exactly how much he has put in the pot since Mr. Roosevelt came on the scene at Albany, but figures on the campaign accounts on file here run into the hundreds of thousands, and probably there is much more credited to other sources which came from Lehman interests.

Special Session is Likely

While not a foregone conclusion, a special session of the Legislature is quite likely to be held soon after the election. The purpose will be to consider plans for unemployment relief, as the activities authorized at the regular session extend only until about the middle of September. On November 8 the people will vote on a $30,000,000 bond issue for relief and if it carries plans for applying it will have to be provided. If it doesn't carry a special session will likely be necessary to provide some other means as it is quite unlikely the business improvement now definitely started will have progressed far enough to render help unnecessary the coming winter.

CONSUMER PICK-UP PREFERRED TO SELLERS STRIKES

Believing that more is gained by a consumer pick-up than a consumer strike the farmers of New York are rallying to the advertising program of the county farm bureaus to encourage the consuming public of New York state to patronize home industry.

Georgia peaches have been sold for many years in New York state. The farmers of the Seneca Lake peach belt and in the counties of Monroe, Wayne, Orleans and Niagara the growers are identifying the luscious peaches which they are raising so that consumers in the market may know where the fruit they are buying had its origin.

Already 3500 posters for the use of truckers and for display in the terminal markets have been circulated and favorable comment is being made over the territory on the attractiveness of this first cooperative advertising.

These three color posters bear a center spread of an attractive peach in three colors, with the words, "We Sell Seneca Lake Peaches", or in case of western New York the identification is by counties.

• AN ARMY •

who take little time

When a salesman calls upon you, your subconscious question is, "How much time will he take?"

Yet every day an army of salesmen comes marching into your living room. They take your time only when you can spare it. They present their products to you briefly and politely, without a single interruption during your moments of consideration. They retire at your wish, or tell you more if you desire.

Are you learning all you can from these salesmen —the advertisements in your newspaper? They come from the market places of the world. They bring the latest facts about the things you want and need, suggest other things you might want and need. They can make life more pleasant, efficient and economical. But you —and you alone—are the judge!

Can you afford to deny an audience to these salesmen? They do more than try to sell you something. They bring you the news of what your neighbors and your countrymen are doing in the world of business.

Advertisements do not ring doorbells—but they receive cordial reception from intelligent, discriminating people everywhere. Again and again they point out the only true bargains—sound merchandise at fair prices. When you read the advertisements, you are helping yourself to better things!

IMPORTANT

When you ask for a product by name, as a result of advertising, do not accept a substitute—substitutes are offered not as a service to you, but for other reasons.

Predicts Victory For Repubilcan Party

The Republican Party will have little difficulyt in carrying New York State for President Hoover and Vice President Curtis during the impending presidential election, according to William R. Willcox, who was chairman of the Republican National Committee during the campaign of 1916. Mr. Willcox said he felt confident that not only would the national ticket carry New York State, but that the state ticket had an excellent chance of victory. Mr. Willcox in his time has served as chairman of the New York Park Board, as chairman of the Public Service Commission under Governor Hughes, and as Post master of New York during the administration of President Theodore Roosevelt.

"New York State has given many of the Republican leaders no little worry," Mr. Willcox said, "But I think that their chances of victory there are greater than ever. The Hoover administration has gained the confidence of the citizens of New York and to my mind it is very doubtful that they would care to change at this critical time.

"At no time in the history of our country has there been as great a and enlightened guidance as there is now. That's why I stand so wholeheartedly behind President Hoover in his campaign for re-election.

"And when I say that I am not speaking as a partisan or even as a Republican. I speak as an American citizen who would like to see the country led out of the economic darkness through which the whole world has been traveling. I think that of all the world leaders of the world, Mr. Hoover has been the one economic depression.

"President Hoover's Accomplishments during the current year have been admirable. His work with the congress has been that of a great and tried statesman and his efforts toward world peace showed him to be a true humanitarian.

"I think his acceptance speech was one of the most momentous documents of our time. He set his ideas and ideals forth clearly, honestly and fearlessly. It was a masterful presentation of the record of his administration, revealing initiative, judgement and sound learership.

"The Democrats in the House, when they had the power and opportunity, deliberately refused to do what they now pledge they will do if given power and opportunity. Why diidn't they perform the first time? And what right have they to claim anybody's faith that they will do better next time.?

Tenth Installment

SYNOPSIS: Johnny Breen, 16 years old, who has spent all his life aboard a Hudson river tugboat plying near New York City, is made motherless by an explosion which sinks the tug and tosses him into the river. He swims and crawls ashore where starts a new and strange life. He is ignorant, cannot read, and knows nothing of life in a great city. . . . Beaten and chased by toughs he is rescued by a Jewish family living off the Bowery in the rear of their second-hand clothing store. . . . Here he is openly courted by the young daughter. Breen fights bullies in self-defense . . . and soon is picked up by an unscrupulous manager who cheats him—until "Pug" Malone at the saloon-fight club, attracted to the boy, takes him under his wing. . . . On the other side of the picture are the wealthy Van Horns of Fifth Avenue. There is a Gilbert Van Horn, last of the great family, a bachelor, in whose life is a hidden chapter with his mother's maid—who leaves the home—to be lost in the city life—when Gilbert is accused. . . . It was reported the maid married an old captain of a river tug . . . rather than return home—and was soon a mother. . . . Under Malone's guardianship young Breen develops fast. . . . "Pug" discovers the boy cannot read—starts him to night school and the world commences to open for Johnny Breen. . . . Malone, an old-timer, is backed in a health-farm venture—taking Breen with him. There they meet and come to know Gilbert Van Horn. John attracts Van Horn, who learns of Breen's mother, named Harriet. Learning John's desire for an engineering course at Columbia University — he advances the money. John comes to know Josephine, Van Horn's ward. At school, Breen grinds so hard he verges on a nervous breakdown. Van Horn steps in again to help save him.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

"Mr. Gilbert is coming back to town and is bringing Mr. Breen," Jules announced to Josephine, in bed with her toast and coffee.

John had been at the Van Horn home for ten days. He looked remarkably well. His lounge suit, from Van Horn's tailor, fitted him as clothes had never fitted him before.

"You can pay me back when you get out on the job." Van Horn arranged the matter easily. John Breen, apparently without an effort or a thought about the matter, slipped into the mood of his new environment. He was perfectly natural, natural in a way men are natural and simple behind the bar of a Bowery saloon. John, without knowing it, practiced the ultimate in correct behavior; he was completely at his ease, as he saw no reason to be otherwise.

Josephine, after John evidenced no awkward signs of stage fright, and seemed endowed with an inherent gentleness, went to remarkable lengths in the process of his further education. He held her naturally, skillfully, and picked up the latest dance steps with astonishing facility. She took him to the exclusive Desdemona Dance at the St. Botolph. John was accepted everywhere through the introduction of Van Horn.

John's period of rest had come to a close. His last day had been strangely quiet. His nerves were no longer on edge, but in the depth of his being he felt a sinking sensation of loss. Of course John Breen was more than merely interested in Josephine.

Returning from Pagliacci alone with Josephine one evening the car jolted as they swung across Forty-second Street, and Josephine uttered a startled "Oh!" as they skidded on the slippery street when brought to a sudden stop behind a jam, a bus having blocked the crazy, unregulated traffic just as it started moving swiftly northward. Josephine was thrown against John. His arm steadied her. Her long glove was off; he caught her hand as the car stopped. She rested against him, her cloak open at the throat, her bare shoulder beneath his eyes, in the pale light from the arc lamps across the avenue. Neither spoke. Their breathing was intense. An impulse held them, the wild melody of the moment before seemed to reverberate through their minds. The scent of her hair, the compelling thrill of contact, swayed them on a crest of emotion. John pressed her to him with sudden rudeness, kissing her. Josephine, her eyes closed, did more than just receive the imprint of his lips.

The car slid to stop before the house in the middle Fifties. They sat bolt upright. Both were wiser than before.

Back in the dormitory John arranged his work in a methodical way, looked through his books as if coming back to old friends, filled his favorite pipe from his dry tobacco in the humidor, looked out of the window over the roofs of Harlem, looked at himself in the mirror and smiled. Well, after all, he had a great prize ahead of him in the mighty City of New York. On his chiffonier was the likeness of Josephine; in décolleté and with a rose in her hair. Visitors to his room would glance at it approvingly. Malone and Harboard were there.

"A kick goes further than a kiss, when you're arguin' with a jackass." Malone swung a polished boot, one leg over the study table in John's room. Harboard was in the big chair by the window and John sat on the couch. "That kid there needed a kick, an' you give it to him, good an' hard." They were holding a post mortem over John's breakdown, and his almost immediate recovery. The city had simply floored him for a few counts and he was again on his feet, better than ever. "What John needs is strong medicine. I've trained him, tended bar 'long side of him, seen him dive in after learnin', seen him follow it like a bloodhound; yes, an' stick, Harboard, stick at it night after night, diggin' on courses an stuffin himself with grammar, hist'ry, an' 'rithmetick, an' readin' the guts out of big books, like he was trying to find out somethin' irregular. His trouble, Harboard, is goin the whole hog, or none. He damn near killed himself when he learned to read, expected he could start right in an' find out everythin' there was. He was afraid there was not enough for him to learn." Pug looked at John, smiling. He liked a fighter and John was certainly that. "If the women ever get hold of him—Gawd help him, an' them."

John blushed furiously. Malone and Harboard looked at each other. Both glanced at Josephine's picture on the chiffonier; nothing had been said about it.

At last, in the spring, John graduated.

C. E. Civil Engineer! John Breen, C.E. John wrote his name again and again, always adding the significant letters for which he had struggled during four years that once seemed so long and then lay behind him like a sudden dream. It had been a fight, it was always a fight in the greater city.

He kept looking at his sheepskin, an elaborate parchment quaintly stating that he was entitled to "all the rights, privileges and immunities thereunto appertaining." He went to Greenbough carrying the precious screed clutched in his fist. Here was something to show to Pug, to prove that his studies had not been entirely in vain. Behind him the last days of the commencement kept recurring, brilliant flashes, intermingled with his dreams of what was to come, with thoughts of Josephine and comfortable interesting problems he would discuss with Gilbert Van Horn. Never had the campus been so afire with the spirit of youth.

Gilbert Van Horn returned to town and spent a week with John and Pug at Greenbough. He had kept away from the commencement. "Not feeling any too fit," was his excuse. In fact Gilbert was getting very close to the point where he would have to make a clean breast of things and take his chances with John—but always hoping against hope that something would turn up, "in a natural way." He kept his thoughts to himself and devoted a large part of his time to watching Josephine. Gerrit Rantoul, so he began to realize, was making remarkable progress with his ward. Rantoul was a romantic figure, a man with a past shrouded in the glamour of adventure, of South American and African enterprises, a man glossed with the polish of an international experience.

But Rantoul was a good chap, as Gilbert had to admit. He secured an appointment for John Breen as Assistant Engineer on the great Catskill Aqueduct. "Subject, of course, to confirming examination."

"Mighty decent of him, John," Van Horn remarked. He felt a bit piqued that Rantoul should have done it. If he had thought, he could have managed it himself; but it was a compliment to John, and any one who helped John, helped him.

"Jo sends her congratulations, John. You'll be seeing her soon. Then this winter, when you get started on your work, we'll all be in the city together. Think of it, you might have gone west, or to Brazil, on that railroad, or up to Alaska on that survey."

"No, Gil, I'm set on the city. Biggest engineering problem in the world. I expect to be here all my life."

"Well, the Van Horns have always stuck to New York." Gilbert looked at the boy, closely, as he said it. John Breen was thinking of other things, not of the Van Horns.

John came down to the city on a Friday. Reported at Division Headquarters, saw huge offices filled with men working at drafting boards, or engaged in calculations. Other men, rough, with mud-splattered boots, some carrying tunnel lamps, came in from a dented car just hauled up at the curb. These were executive engineers, members of the field force.

The walls were covered with profiles, with progress markings. A contagious air of intense activity held sway. It seemed to John that he was on the edge of a great field of battle, of life and sudden death, of vast constructions. John knew what thirst was, knew the sickly trickle of the lukewarm Croton water, running brackish and yellow in the deep honeycomb of the city. Here were men working day and night to bring the water down the clear, cold, sparkling water of the old hills where Rip Van Winkle slept and dreamed. Men were drilling and sinking shafts, were tunneling and mining under the broad Hudson, and now the huge final bore, beneath Manhattan, was to be accomplished, the last deep drift four hundred and more feet in the solid rock of the parching, steaming city. It was a magnificent enterprise, a cause, a crusade, a direct reply to those who give scant honor to the engineer.

His appointment had been accomplished in a moment. These men wasted no time. "Report Section Five, Shaft Eleven, to engineer Hurlburt, Monday, eight A.M," The Division Engineer, named Wild, shook his hand. "Keep your eyes open, and good luck." John was on the street and entering the new Subway at 181st Street.

"Why did he wish me 'good luck'?" he wondered. A man sitting next to John held a paper, he saw the headline. TEN MEN KILLED ON AQUEDUCT SIPHON. It was printed in red and further down was listed a long record of other casualties and deaths.

John stopped at the field house marked Shaft XI. He met the gang, Malling, a Penn. man, and Barrow of Boston Tech. These fellows had an extra room in a small apartment near the work. "Sure, come in, it's handy here and you can't hear all the blasts if you're a sound sleeper."

James Malling, C.E., had already been on important work, driving the Pennsylvania tubes. He had the unhealthy pallor of the men who have worked in shields, under pressure "Came up here for my health. Rather get gunned than doubled with the bends. Take my tip, Breen, keep out of air." He spoke with the assurance of a man of immense experience.

Everywhere an earnest activity prevailed, the palaverers were not there, these men were doers. They were assembling the machinery for sinking a shaft in Morningside Park. A swearing boss driver was ragging a gang of sullen Polack workmen; several engineers stood about discussing location prints, and Malling, in charge of a new transit, was directing some youths carrying a silvery tape and a plumb bob. He beckoned to John.

"Don't report until Monday," he advised. "They run this job like a war," he added with a certain pride. "You got your orders, see Hurburt at eight, sharp, blue Monday, and then pronto! pronto! pronto! "Hey, you!" he bent to the eye-piece of the telescope and bawled at his assistants. "Left, dammit, left! Don't you fellows know the signals?" Malling straightened himself with a smile of important disgust

An impulse held them, the wild melody of the moment before seemed to reverberate through their minds.

REVIVE BERRY BED WITH FERTILIZERS

Both New and Old Strawberry Plants Regain Vigor From August Nitrate Application.

New York state strawberry beds, both old and new plantings, have suffered from dry weather but can be made to regain their vigor with a late August application of a nitrate fertilizer such as sulphate of ammonia, nitrate of soda, or calcium nitrate, says G. W. Peck of the New York state college of agriculture . A 150 pound application to the acre of the fertilizer, worked into the soil thoroughly to prevent burning, is good treatment for any strawberry bed and almost necessary for some that are in bad condition, he says.

Professor Peck warns that the fertilizer should not touch the foliage, or serious burning may result. It is well to to attach some contrivance to the cultivator, such as a cross bar with grain sacks fastened on each end, and allow the sacks to drag over the row and dislodge any of the caustic fertilizer that may have settled on the leaves.

Where liberal amounts of stable manure have been used, the added use of nitrogen fertilizer is questionable. A free Cornell bulletin about strawberry growing, which discusses other points about growing the fruit, is available from the New York state college of agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y. Ask for E-211.

Back in 1917 a writer in describing New York said: "Four new business firms start up every 42 minutes."

Popular Demand Calls Women To Cornell Canning Class

With the resources of its faculty and laboratories turned over to the use of women from all parts of the state, for help on food preservation, the New York state college of home economics at Cornell University recalls war-time day, according to Mrs. Ruby Green Smith, new leader of home demonstration agents in New York state. During the World War, Mrs. Smith was deputy state food commissioner of this state and represented the U. S. Department of Agriculture on war emergency committees.

The fifteen women attending the training school last week were chosen because of their previous training and experience in canning, in teaching and in leadership. Steuben County was represented by Mrs. C. C. Cornue of Avoca.

The women were assembled at the college to find out the best way of using the latest scientific information on preserving fruits, vegetables, and meats. The school was organized by Dr. Flora Rose, director of the college of home economics. On her return, women who have attended this school will be capable of demonstrating in their own and neighboring communities, how to can practically any foods.

This training scholl is in response to S. O. S. calls from all parts of the state, from individuals and organizations that want to know more about canning the food they are not raising. Although four extra extension specialists from the college have been demonstrating food preservation all summer for all summer, more requests for this kind of help have come to college the last few months than have reached it since the late war.

Other women who attended the school were: Mrs. Ernest Landon, Vestal, Broome County; Mrs. Frances M. Graham, Salamanca, Cattaraugus County; Mrs. Mary Switzer, Illion, Herkimer County; Mrs. Elston F. Holton, Webster, Monroe County; Mrs. Herbert Smith, Skaneateles, Onondaga county; Miss Mary Fitz Randolph, Cooperstown, Otsego County; Mrs. Harry Fogarty of Rochester City Home Bureau; Mrs. Thomas A. Belton, Ballston, Spa, Saratoga County; Mrs. E. C. Jenkins of Syracuse City Home Bureau; Mrs. Ethel Olsen Strong, Owego, Tioga County; Mrs. William Kenneally, Jr. Glens Falls, Warren County; Miss Grace Smith, Herkimer, Herkimer County; Miss Margaret Huggerio, George Junior Republic, Freeville, Tompkins County; and Mrs. Charles L. Voss, Ithaca, Tompkins County.

Teach Corn Preservation

When it is Ready to Eat it is Right for Drying or Canning.

When corn is right for eating it is right for canning. It should be somewhere between "milk" stage when the juice spurts out when the kernel is pressed, and the dough stage, when the contents of the kernel may be pressed out in a mass, according to the New York state college of home economics.

Fairly small amounts of corn should be canned at any one time, because flat sour may sometimes develop, in large lots, in the first jars prepared while the last ones are being filled. The kernals may be cut close to the cob without scraping to give a product of nearly whole kernels, or the outer ends of the grains may be cut off first and the remainder scraped, giving a product without a hull which is particularly good for soup. This is called cream style corn and should be cooked longer than the whole grain.

Pack the corn in hot jars to within one inch of the top, fill the jars with boiling water, and place them in the canner as quickly as possible. Water should not be added to any of the jars until all have been packed with corn. Process under ten pounds steam pressure for fifty minutes, or if cream style, for an hour.

Drying preserves corn where no pressure cooker is available. The corn should be in the same stage as for canning, or for the table, and should be dried as soon as possible after gathering, and as quickly as possible in order to retain its flavor. Left-overs of cooked corn on the cob may be dried according to the following directions.

To five cups of corn, measured after cutting from the cob, add one-half cup sugar and one-fourth cup salt. The cutting should be done from the small end of the cob toward the butt, and the kernels should not be cut too close, but all the milk should be pressed out with the back of the knife. Mix the corn, sugar, and salt, place them in a pan over boiling water, and stir the mixture frequently until all the milk has been absorbed. Spread the corn on plates and dry it in a slow oven, about 250 degrees Fahrenheit, stirring it occasionally to prevent scorching. The drying usually takes a half day, but it is essential that the drying be complete, a longer time may be necessary.

To prepare dried corn for the table, soak it over night in water and then heat until it is tender, or for about two hours. Add milk, butter, and any other desired seasoning. To serve it as a breakfast food, grind the corn rather fine, crisp it slightly in the oven, and serve with cream.

The Devil's Shoestring

The "devil's shoestring," a heretofore Texas weed pest, is likely to serve a great good to mankind, reports the Department of Agriculture. The weed contains poisons fatal to insect life. Experts are now trying to extract the juices in quanties to be used as an inexpensive insecticide. If successful it will bring wealth to Texas and take the place of ten million pounds of pyrethrum flowers now imported each year.

VERY LATESTS

By MARY MARSHALL

This is to be a wind-blown season for fall and winter millinery. No matter whether it is a felt or a velvet if the new hat has the wind-blown effect it is a good silhouette at this time . . . Also and of much importance, veined seaming, as illustrated in the top sketch, is quite the thing in crowns.

Hats with the beret suggestion are meeting with much favor . . . but not the plain beret of other seasons. Instead they are carefully worked out in felts and velvets with bows and feathers and it was this fashion twist which brings the wind-blown effects — and noted in all new models.

In velvets, black and brown, the turbans are enjoying an early season popularity, especially for afternoon wear. Velvets and dull finish fabric hats will also enjoy great favor later in the season.

It is predicted the elegance of women's costumes this fall and winter will call for close harmony in line and feeling twixt hat and gown. Therefore the selection of milady's hat this season is of utmost importance.

Regional Credit Corporation Requested for This District

Albany, Sept. 6—At a meeting held in the office of the Department of Agriculture and Markets today Commissioner Charles H. Baldwin appointed a committee to present a petition to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the establishment of a Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation in the first federal land bank district. This district is made of of New York, the New England States and New Jersey, and the commissioners of agriculture in these states have been invited by Commissioner Baldwin to cooperate in plans for establishment of the credit corporation. Commissioner Edward H. Jones, of Vermont, Commissioner Andrew L. Felker of New Hampshire, Commissioner Harry R. Lewis of Rhode Island, and Commissioner S. McLean Buckingham of Connecticut have already informed Commissioner Baldwin that they will be glad to serve on the committee which will present the petition.

Commissioner Baldwin appointed the following committee for New York State: George W. Sisson, Jr., of Potsdam, President of the American Jersey Club; Peter G. Ten Eyck of Albany, chairman of the Albany Port District Commission; Representative in Congress Robert Low Bacon of Westbury, Long Island; C. R. White of Ionia, President of the New York State Farm Bureau Federation; A. L. Brockway of Syracuse, Vice-President of the New York State Agricultural Society; and Roy P. McPherson of Leroy, Secretary of the New York State Horticultural Society.

Commissioner Buckingham suggested that the members of the committee meet at the Eastern States Exposition in Springfield during the week of September 18, but Commissioner Baldwin, it was stated, feels that more immediate action is necessary.

Allen L. Gillett, vice president and manager of the Intermediate Credit Bank of Springfield, informed Commissioner Baldwin that the bank will be glad to supply the capital will be glad to supplement the capital obtained for the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation if additional funds are necessary.

The plan for petitioning the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the establishment of the Credit Corporation in this district was promulgated after a conference between Commissioner Baldwin, Representative Bacon and others.

It was pointed out that the establishment of such a credit corporation has tremendous potential value to farmers throughout the district, and particularly in New York State. Under the proposed plan the corporation would be created with a capital of not less than three million dollars to be subscribed entirely by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This regional corporation, under the provisions of the act, would be authorized to make loans and advances to farmers throughout the district for agricultural purposes.

"Immediate accessibility to agricultural credit funds will be provided and will, if available before the peak of the crop movement, stave off serious losses to farmers in various lines of production", said Commissioner Baldwin.

Commissioners W. B. Duryee of New Jersey, A. W. Gilbert of Massachusetts, and F. P. Washburn of Maine, have been invited to cooperate as members of the committee and while they have not yet accepted it is expected they will be glad to join with the representatives of the other states in asking the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the establishment of the credit corporation in the first district.

4-H CLUB NEWS

New Fair Building

The state fair of Oklahoma is now among the many which have provided an adequate building to house 4-H club exhibits. The new hall will be ready for this year's fair at Oklahoma City, starting September 24, according to Ralph T. Hemphill, manager of the fair. The new building is being erected at a cost of $50,000 and will be one of the finest structures of its kind in the country.

It is of fire-proof construction throughout and will be used for no other purpose than headquarters for club folks. It replaces an old frame structure in which the first exhibits of 4-H products were made in the days when club work was just getting under way.

The building is to be 56 feet wide and 262 feet long, two stories high and of brick and concrete. It will enable the several hundred boys and girls who annually have attended the fair in recent years to enter into competitive demonstrations. The new club build- will be opened with elaborate dedication ceremonies just preceding the fair at which leading state officials and club leaders of the state will take part.

B. A. Pratt, state leader of boys club work in the state, will be in charge of the activities of club members during the fair with other members of the extension staff at Stillwater.

Housing for the state fair school, started in 1910, will be provided by the new hall. Mr. Hemphill states that in the annual schools held at the fair for club members since they were started 16,610 boys and girls have enrolled.

Regular Republican Candidate For Congressman

Sterling Cole, who seeks the Republican nomination for Representative in Congress, is a native and life long resident of Steuben County.

He attended Colgate University where he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts and whose President, Dr. George B. Cutten has written a letter of approval and good wishes. For several years, he was a valued member of the Corning Free Academy faculty, having charge of sciences and languages in which he met with signal success.

It was while teaching that he accumulated the funds for his entrance into Albany Law School of Union University from which institution he in turn was graduated with a law degree and subsequently admitted to the New York State Bar Association.

At present, he is a member of the law firm, Cole & Cole of Bath. Here his scholarly attainments and his capacity as a student have elevated him to a high place among the members of the bar.

His Republicanism is attested by the present and past chairmen of the Republican County Committee of Steuben County who are openly and actively working for his nomination. Republican officeholders and organization leaders are supporting him against Mr. Stalker.

He is a Boy Scout Commissioner, a Presbyterian elder, a member of the Board of Education and a member of the Masonic lodge.

"The taxpayers on the farms, in the villages and in small cities are today bearing a burden which must be lifted before we can have prosperity. Agriculture and business must be freed from the load of taxation which they are carrying.

"If I am nominated and elected, I shall be the servant of the men and women of this district. I ask the votes of every Republican man and woman on Primary Day, September 20 and pledge myself to endeavor to carry out their wishes when elected." STERLING COLE

ENDORSEMENT OF TOWN'S PEOPLE

The Bath Courier, official Republican paper of Steuben County, made the following response to enquiries from outside Steuben County regarding Sterling Cole:

"Sterling Cole—clean—fine. He is as true as steel. He made a fine record as a student in High School and Colgate, where he was voted the most popular and useful man in his class, besides receiving high class honors. Stalker Strong in All Parts Of the District Says Paper

(From The Canisteo TIMES, Republican organ of Steuben Co.)

Friends of Congressman Stalker—and they are legion—are rushing to his support in the campaign for the Republican nomination for member of congress in this, the 37th congressional district. The election is only 3 weeks off, taking place Tuesday, Sept. 20. It is predicted that he will carry at least 4 counties out of 5 by comfortable majorities.

Congressman Stalker has been a vigorous and consistent supporter of President Hoover dating from the day he became president. In fact Stalker was one of the first Hoover men in this congressional district and did everything within his power to bring about the nomination of the man who was elected president.

Mr. Stalker received the following letter from Bertrand H. Snell, Republican leader of the House, at the close of the adjournment of the recent session of Congress:

WASHINGTON, July 10, 1932.

Dear Gale:

I want to take this opportunity to thank you for your cooperation and support during the past session. It has been a hard session but because of willingness on the part of the individual members to work together I think we have come out in pretty good shape.

I hope you have a pleasant vacation and will come back with renewed strength and energy to join in fighting our Democratic opponents.

With kind personal regards, I remain, Yours truly,
BERT SNELL.

Congressman Stalker has always been a strong Republican organization man and has supported the Republican organizations in all 5 counties of the district at all times. As yet the campaign of Attorney W. S. Cole of Bath for the nomination has not yet become formidable outside of Steuben county, it is stated by experienced political observers who believe that the Elmira Congressman will receive a larger majority in the district than he received two years ago when Reuben B. Oldfield of Bath ran against him.

Just why Bath should furnish 2 opposition candidates at 2 subsequent elections is exciting widespread comment not all of which is of a favorable character. It is pointed out that Stalker has been extremely generous in bringing notable public improvements to Bath such as the federalizing and resuscitating of the State Sailors and Soldiers' Home, and a new $100,000 post office building.

Stalker is credited with obtaining more pensions, bonuses and back payments for veterans than any other congressman in the House of Representatives. On account of his friendliness to them and his success in aiding them, a large majority of the veterans of the World War are said to be supporting him.

Comment by Newspapers

The Bath Courier, Republican organ, contained the following comment regarding Congressman Stalker in its last issue:

"Congressman Stalker, who has been the representative for the last ten years, is not idle these days. He has strong support, especially among the drys in the district, whose cause he has served with utter faithfulness during his term. It is conceded that Mr. Stalker has given this district excellent representation during the ten years he has served. He has done a great many things which strengthened him with a large number of people in all parts of this district. One of the newspapers in Steuben county, speaking of the contest this week, said:

"To many voters there appear to be slight if any difference in their policies and what they stand for. They say Mr. Cole is a bright and worthy young man, but that Stalker is now at the height of his influence and usefulness in Congress; that he has had the experience; he has strong and favorable connections in Congress; is on powerful committees; that he is not chairman of any committee because no Republican can be committee chairman under the Democrats who elected a Democratic speaker and organized the House; and that for the good of the district Stalker should and will be renominated and elected."

FARM BUREAUS OPEN ADVERTISING PROGRAM AT STATE FAIR

Exhibits This Year to Feature New York Farm Products.

The county farm bureaus will launch their program to encourage the use of New York state farm products at the New York state fair in Syracuse, September 5-10.

Instead of the usual educational exhibits that show how some practice has been successfully carried out, the bureaus will this year focus their entire attention on the importance and uses of New York farm products.

In order that the visitors at the fair may have some tangible reminder of the lessons which they have been taught, the bureaus will distribute recipe booklets on the uses of farm products displayed. The county bureaus have been allotted eight spaces by Dan. J. Ackerman, manager of the fair. These spaces will be combined into four large spaces with two counties working to display one product.

The counties that will exhibit are Dutchess and Greene, fruit; Allegany and Steuben, potatoes; Onondaga and Lewis, milk; Tioga and Chemung, poultry.

These exhibits will be judged on the basis of attractiveness and appeal to the consumer in selling the farm product. The bureaus are using as their slogan: "The Farm Bureau Says: 'Use New York Farm Products'."
